Bird Ventriloquist Curious Creature Of Panama Jungles

WASHINGTON, D. C.—In Panama jungles there is a bird ventriloquist.

This curious creature, the gray-headed dove, is described by Dr. Alexander Wetmore, former Secretary of the Smithsonian Institution and now Smithsonian research associate, in a publication on the birds of Isla Coiba, Panama. Dr. Wetmore reports an extensive study of the bird life of this Pacific convict island.

The ventriloquist, he says, was one of the most common birds in the Coiba forests.

"They live and feed on the ground," he reports, "usually two or three together, rising to low perches on logs or branches when flushed, if not too badly frightened. Occasionally I had random glimpses of them, walking with bobbing heads among the shadows, or standing completely motionless, when it was difficult to distinguish them in the dim light of their haunts.

"Some of the males were calling, a single hooting note, so highly ventriloquial that we never succeeded in following it to see the actor perform though we were certain of the source. Usually the birds when calling appeared to rest on low branches near the ground, where they were completely concealed. When we came too near they became silent and flew or walked away.

An interesting little bird was the verdero, or yellow-faced grassquit. It was a creature of pastures and the edge of the forest, congregating especially where tall grasses have ripening seeds. "They feed," says Dr. Wetmore, "by balancing on the grass heads as these sway and bend beneath their slight weight. At headquarters dozens came to feed about the mill that hulled the rice. They were completely tame and often came hopping about the feet of men sitting on benches."

TV's Effects On Children Not Bad

CHICAGO—Contrary to popular belief, television's effect on school children is not all bad, Northwestern University studies have shown.

In fact, children's strong interest in television may be an asset, if television watching is handled properly in the home, according to Paul Witty, Ph.D., director of the psycho-educational clinic, Northwestern University, Evanston, Ill.

Each year since 1949 the Northwestern clinic has studied the TV viewing habits of more than 2,000 children in the Chicago area. Children, their teachers, and their parents have been interviewed, Witty said.

By the spring of 1950, after TV's first appearance in 1949, 43 per cent of the children interviewed had TV sets at home. In 1951, 68 per cent had them, and in 1957, 96 per cent had them. In one school, only one child did not have a TV set at home.

Wandering Patients Suffer From Syndrome

CHICAGO—Patients who travel from hospital to hospital faking startling symptoms to gain admission may have Munchausen's syndrome.

A case of the syndrome was outlined in the Journal of the American Medical Association by Dr. John S. Chapman of the State University of Iowa College of Medicine, Iowa City. He said his is the first reported American case, although the condition has been reported frequently in England.

In 1931 an English physician "somewhat facetiously" applied the term Munchausen's syndrome to "perennial peregrinating problem patients" because "their wide travels and fanciful histories are reminiscent of the travels and adventures of fiction's Baron Munchausen," Dr. Chapman said.

Accident Rate Rises Among Pre-School Group

NEW YORK—Better protection against accidents is urgently needed for America's preschool children.

The proportion of accidental deaths to the total number of deaths in the 1-4 age group has increased from 12 per cent to nearly 20 per cent in two decades, it has been reported. While the death rate from disease in this age group was being reduced by four-fifths—from 417.3 to 82.4 per 100,000—between 1934-35 and 1954-55, the corresponding decrease for fatal accidents was much smaller —from 56.5 to 33.1 per 100,000.

Our Income High

NEW YORK—The aggregate real income of more than 160 million Americans today probably exceeds the combined income of the 600 million people living in Europe and Russia and far surpasses the total income of the more than one billion inhabitants of Asia.

David Trent Opens New Business Here

In step with the progressive business methods of the Trent family, David Trent last month brought to Appomattox County farmers a long-needed service. Young Trent, who has been associated with his brother, T. M. Trent, hatching and raising turkeys, returned from the Daffin Mobile Mill School at Lancaster, Pa., April 24, the proud owner of a new Daffin modern feed mill mounted on wheels. Mr. Trent reports that the remarkable machine provides on-the-farm processing of all kinds of livestock and poultry feed, utilizing the farmer's own home-grown grain or roughages.

This service is provided on a regular route basis.

"It's really a community service," says Mr. Trent, "and will go a long way toward making our farmers in Appomattox County more prosperous and our agriculture even more important."

Trent's new firm will be known as Trent's Mobile Milling Service, and they will handle a complete line of feeds and concentrates, as well as blackstrap molasses.

This is truly a family affair, with Mrs. Trent handling the bookkeeping. Trent's daughters are excited about the new "addition" to the family, Sandra, age 14, exclaiming, "It's beautiful!"

Everyone wishes success to this newest enterprise in our community.

HOME AGENT'S NOTES

Mary O. Armisteaad
Acting H. D. Agent

Virginia Home Demonstration Club women are making a little inventory these days. The occasion? National Home Demonstration Week, May 4-10.

On the local scene, club members are making plans to attend the district Home Demonstration meeting to be held Friday, May 9, in Nelson County. This is the yearly club meeting when club members from ten counties have the opportunity to assemble, exchange ideas and renew friendships. The theme "Today's Home Builds, Tomorrow's World," will be stressed through talks and a panel discussion by International Farm Youth Exchange delegates.

Throughout the month of May, individual clubs are conducting membership drives. At meetings, special emphasis is being placed upon the purpose of club work "to help homemakers and families to help themselves."

The goals on which programs are planned include:

Improve health. The home agent helps homemakers to plan home food production, to preserve food, prepare it, and to select the proper balanced diet for health.

To get more for their money—to buy wisely and to plan better for their spending and saving.

To plan work so as to use their time and energy with the utmost efficiency.

To learn to make their own clothing and to get their money's worth when they buy.

To improve and repair homes and house furnishings to have more comfortable, attractive and convenient homes.

To develop an appreciation of good design and the beauty in our surroundings.

To rear children more intelligently and to have healthy, happy families.

To assist in developing satisfactory communities in which to live and rear families.

Progress towards these goals is guided by the county agent and home demonstration agent, with the assistance and support of the county home demonstration club officers led by Mrs. C. G. O'Brien, president, and each officer and member of the local clubs.

Play safe — drive carefully.
